

Wie geht's? Ça va?
I'm Peter Clark... you'll often find me interpreting or translating for football clubs such as Chelsea.

What did you study?

I studied French, Music and Communications at University and then did my German teacher/translator diploma in America.

How much do you use your language in your job?

I use my languages every day without fail. German probably accounts for about 30-40% of my daily telephone calls/emails, etc.

How many languages do you speak?

Bi-lingual German/English, average French and I can understand 6 other languages.

What is the best aspect about your job?

Meeting and getting to know high profile football players and managers and travelling throughout the world to major football games and tournaments.

Are there other languages would you like to learn?

Definitely Italian and I would like to improve my French so that I am totally fluent.

Best thing about speaking another language?

Being able to speak a language fluently opens up opportunities for you. I cannot imagine my life without being able to communicate in several languages and always being in an international atmosphere.

How does your background influence the languages you speak?

I was fortunate that I grew up bi-lingual German/English, as my father worked for NATO and we were based in Heidelberg, Germany. This meant I spoke English when at home and German when not at home.

Tell us more about your own football language company...

Clark Football Languages Ltd. works with football clubs, the press and media to provide a unique language service. We run in sixteen countries throughout Europe. Clients include; Chelsea, The FA, Bayern München & FC Barcelona.

